Editing: Patterns & Rhythm

Discussion

Run Lola Run (Tom Tykwer, 1998)

Initial post is DUE by [Sunday 7/13 at 11:59pm]. Reply post(s) DUE by [Sunday 7/13 at 11:59pm].

Purpose

Our discussion in this Module focuses on Run Lola Run and editing techniques. Run Lola Run is an ideal film to study with regards to editing; much of the film's formal style seems to be a demonstration of many of the editing techniques outlined in the reading. We will discuss the functions of editing in our discussion including how editing fragments action and events, creates meanings through juxtaposition, creates spatial and temporal relationships between shots, and establishes and controls shot duration, pace, and rhythm.

Instructions

For your Initial Discussion Post due by Sunday 7/13 at 11:59pm, please respond to the following prompt below in a post of at least 300 words. You do not have to address every detail of the prompt, but your post should contribute to the discussion and not merely repeat what has already been posted by your classmates. While I encourage you to offer your personal views of the films in this Module, please refrain from unproductive summaries of story or plot and/or why a film is "good" or "bad." Assume that everyone in the discussion group has completed the viewing assignment and understands the story/plot of the film. I suggest that you draft your post in Word first and assume that something may go wrong in Canvas when you hit 'Post Reply.' I will not count summary of plot/story or information that is not relevant to the prompt/analysis of one scene toward the required 300-word count. Please identify the time 0(hr):00(min):00(sec) in the film where the scene you are analyzing begins and concludes from the stream of the film included in the Module. Please do not repost the questions from this prompt into your post.

Your analysis should refer to course materials and reflect on how film style and history function. A post that earns full points will not merely agree with course materials, but will visually illustrate ideas through personal observation. Do not forget to include embedded media that visualizes the example(s) in your post. Please make sure that you read all of the posts in your discussion group before posting. I cannot give full points to posts that analyze scenes or shots that have already been selected by another classmate. Please limit your posts to no more than 400 words and 1-2 examples to give others a chance to write about key scenes/shots. Please resize your screenshots and images to 'Extra Large' in the 'Image Options.' The 'Image Options' tag appears above or below an image when you click on it while editing in the Rich Content Editor.

Grading Rubric Checklist for Full Points (Initial Post):

- Post identifies the time where the scene you are analyzing begins and concludes from the stream of the film included in the Module.
- Post analyzes no less than one minute and no more than three minutes of one scene. If you wish to discuss another scene, please do so in your response to another classmate.
- Post addresses materials related to the prompt and course materials.
- Post includes at least two embedded screen captures from the scene you are analyzing. Please resize your screenshots and images to 'Extra Large' in the 'Image Options.' The 'Image Options' tag appears above or below an image when you click on it while editing in the Rich Content Editor.
- Post does not analyze a scene previously selected by a classmate earlier in the thread. Sometimes a classmate will post about the scene you are analyzing while you are writing. It happens. Just message me and let me know.

Please Resize Your Screen Captures to 'Extra Large'

For your Response Post to one classmate due by Sunday 7/13 at 11:59pm, please reply in 75 words or more to at least one classmate's post. Responses may include describing your own insight related to the post, providing additional information from assigned or outside content, disagreeing respectfully by describing your own interpretation, proposing a new idea, or asking a question. I cannot give full points to posts that merely "like" or agree with another post; the response post must demonstrate substantial effort. Please try to respond to a classmate who has not yet received a response.

- Please choose one scene from Run Lola Run and embed at least two (2) screenshots from the scene into your post. Please explain how your example demonstrates one of the key functions of editing in the reading: (i.e. how editing fragments action and events, creates meanings through juxtaposition, creates spatial and temporal relationships between shots, and/or establishes and controls shot duration, pace, and rhythm). Most importantly, you should analyze how the editing techniques in the film affect how we understand content (story/plot). Your analysis should use terminology from the reading and explain its function: fragmentation, parallel editing (crosscutting), flashbacks, flashforwards, split screen, montage editing, associative editing, spatial/temporal relationships between shots, ellipsis, overlapping action, freeze frames etc. How does the editing of your example communicate to us in ways that conventional continuity editing does not?
